

Portals, Vortexes and Elementals.

Chris and I are regularly asked to clear homes and business premises of uninvited or misguided energies. Owners and occupants have experienced all manner of phenomena from a simple feeling of unease to being physically affected in some way. In the majority of cases the property or homes were being affected by a portal of some kind. I have to admit that my experiences with energy portals up until now has been relatively limited. I always thought that portals and vortexes were the same. But, as is the way of the Universe we have been shown some new aspects to the dimensions around us. The following is an account of what we have learnt.

A portal is an energetic connection between two or more dimensions. They occur where dimensions overlap. For those beings capable of perceiving, and indeed accessing a portal, the energy flow is bi-directional. You can get a return ticket if you choose to travel. In comparison, a vortex is a one-way energy flow so you can't buy a return ticket. You will need to have somewhere to stay at the other end...or know the location of a return portal if you travel through it. Most portals have a gatekeeper, but not always, while vortexes generally do not. I say generally because there are exceptions. It is your right to ask the gatekeeper to move the portal if it is adversely impacting other beings, rather than closing them completely. "Other beings" can be read as ignorant humans.

Portals and vortexes can be deemed to have a positive or negative energy associated with them. This of course depends on your point of view, and it is really a human concept. Once, when dealing with a particular portal I was accused of being the "interference" by an inter-dimensional traveller. When you stop and think about it, it's likely that most of these energy fields have been in existence long before we as humans ever built our ridiculous structures. In our ignorance we fail to pay attention to the energies and other beings around us and then complain bitterly when there is an adverse reaction. It should also be noted that at times our small disturbance of energy in an area has created a ripple effect allowing other inter-dimensional beings to take advantage of the imbalance and force out the traditional guardians of the land. We need to remember that we're not the only ones sharing this planet or universe. Every action has a consequence.

So who or what do we need to consider? Each time Chris and I have dealt with these phenomena the traditional owners of the land, whom I call Aboriginal Spirit Guides, have made their presence known. They always show an interest in what we are doing either through a direct request or simply as observers. We have at times been requested to help balance the surrounding energies through a ceremony and in each case it has been a very humbling experience. The imbalances are generally caused by humans anyway so why shouldn't we be part of the solution. We have also been directed by American Indian Spirit Guides to help restore balance when dealing with This seems rather odd but I believe in that case it was more to do with the client than the location. A

We have the traditional owners or custodians of the land and then we have Spirit Guardians or custodians as well as Elementals. Spirit Custodians are energy beings working in co-operation with others to safeguard the Earth's energy fields. Some would simply describe them as light beings. The term Elemental means different things to different people and I do not claim to be an expert in this area. To me the presence of an Elemental is reflected by a very strong, solid energy and quite large. They have been described to me as tree-like beings and yes that makes sense to me, but there are different types attached to water, land and sky. They do not reside or originate from any particular dimension and we limit ourselves by attempting to fit them into some human concept. As an example, a being that described itself as an Elemental made its presence known when we were asked to clear a building near the Gold Coast. The construction of this commercial building had disrupted a Ley Line running through the area with a subsequent disruption to the surrounding energy flow. We were instructed by the Elemental in unison with the traditional custodians, in how the damage could be repaired and the energies balanced. It would not be prudent to describe all the details of the ceremony here. I will say that at one stage Chris began voicing a tone that would have put the most harmonious singing bowl to shame. It was a truly amazing experience.

Ley lines are part of the Earth's energy field or grid and you can read all manner of information about these phenomena if you choose to research it. Again I have to say we are not experts and we welcome input from anyone with knowledge in this area. I know you are about to ask the question...and the answer is no. Aboriginal Songlines are not the same as Ley Lines although they are connected within the concept of complementing vibrations. In regards to restoring the energy imbalances we create, simple acknowledgement or consideration of the impact on the traditional custodians and spirit guides can in itself have a tremendously positive effect. Before Chris and I do any work on the land we always seek permission from spirit guides and ask what they want to be done. Often there needs to be a compromise especially when more than one party is involved. That's when it gets really interesting.

A good example of this involved a home in Brisbane that was being affected by a number of different beings and energies. The property was bordered by two portals on opposite sides, with one emitting some particularly negative energy. On further investigation we discovered a human spirit named Henry, residing in the home. In this case although the presence of Henry was known to the family he was not considered a nuisance. According to Henry he came in with the timber from which the Queensland style home was originally built. Other inter-dimensional beings, either using one of the portals or simply attracted by the energy were definitely causing interference. Traditional spirit guides also made their presence known as observers, and although they were not overly affected by the portals, we consulted them and asked permission to do what was necessary. We asked to speak to the gatekeeper of the offending portal and requested that the portal be moved. This was refused. So what to do?

Believe it or not there is a higher authority you can refer to in these matters for arbitration. Who'd have thought it? There is a Federation of Galactic Forces or Council who seem to have an overriding authority in such matters. (If you want to Google the "galactic federation of light" you will find lots of references, but I recommend you treat the information with some caution.) Within the Council there is a particular position of authority held by a being that I'm not prepared to name here. Suffice to say there is an authority or someone you can call on to settle disputes, not only in regards to portals but also interferences from other beings that may be affecting the health of a person. So in regards to the case I have been describing that's what we did. We dialled up the Galactic Council and were immediately answered. It was becoming like a scene from Star Trek. We had Henry who didn't want to leave. There were some prickly interferences that we dispatched, a belligerent gatekeeper and curious spirit guardians looking over my shoulder at the whole proceedings.

The first directive we received from the Council was that the traditional owners and custodians of the land "have right of way". That's to say their needs and wishes took priority. The second directive was that the gatekeeper must move the portal if requested. As the guardians were not using either of the portals and were happy for the one in question to be removed, it all fell back to the gatekeeper. He was not happy and again I was accused of interfering. There was a short pause in the proceedings while the gatekeeper scanned for a more appropriate place to position the portal. This done, we were given assurances that the portal would no longer negatively impact the home in question. During all this we noted that some guides had approached and offered the spirit of Henry some assistance to move on. He accepted and we said farewell as he left.

This is just one example of working with the amazing dimensions around us. Again I say, we need to remember that we're not the only ones sharing this planet or universe. We are citizens of the Universe and our every action has a consequence.
